

CROZIER CONFIDENT IN SECOND MEETING WITH TOM CARTER

When Tommy Carter and "Dutch" Crozier met for the first time last Sunday afternoon and to greet him the El Paso punch bowl it will be the second and final meeting of the two men if Crozier's confidence is to be taken as indicative of his knockout ability.

"Dutch" worked ten full rounds before a big gathering of his friends Sunday afternoon and to greet him the El Paso punch bowl it will be the second and final meeting of the two men if Crozier's confidence is to be taken as indicative of his knockout ability.

He did not box as there is a decided famine of sparring partners, but from now on he intends to spar from six to ten rounds daily in addition to his other work. Following his workout Sunday afternoon Crozier took advantage of an opportunity to tell his friends of his confidence in winning the knockout route.

Incidentally he advised them to look for a slim boxing outfit as he has been wearing a heavy one for some time.

Now he is acquainted with the weak spots in his opponent's armor and he intends to go after the hard hitting El Paso star.

Crozier looks good. Carter, by the way, has quite a bit of confidence himself. He feels that he has lost absolutely nothing by defeating boys of the type of Chet Neff and Young France since his last meeting with Crozier, where on the other hand the sailor champion has not boxed at all. Neff dropped a ten round decision to Carter just five days after Tommy fought "Dutch" in a 15 round battle here and the aggressive little southwesterer contender then went after France and handed him a licking. He readily agreed to take on the rugged Billy McCann in spite of his formidable record and experience and made a creditable showing, as there was quite a husky voiced delegation at the ringside who yelled for a draw.

Two distinctly different styles are brought together in the two men and they sure know how to mix it, and incidentally damage each other.

But the lightweight will not be the only one featured at the punch bowl on Friday. There will be a few round matchups between these dapper rivals, Cyclone Briggs and Mike Cabell. It will be their fourth meeting in the ring and if the mixing continues to increase in intensity every time they face each other matchmaker Jimmy Erwin is advised to strengthen his ring in expectation of the storm to come. In every one of the three bouts before there has not been one idle moment.

Football, 'The Inside Game'; Making Backfield Threat

By EDDIE CANEY, Harvard Star.

THE game of the 'varsity backfield' is the player who can kick well, run well and throw the forward pass accurately. He is the rarest bird there is in the game and the exact opposite of what is known as the perfect player.

A man who is known to be good at these three varied specialties is called a three-point player. He is a rare bird indeed. He is a man who can kick, run and throw. He is a man who can do all three things in a manner quite bewildering. Imagine yourself a defensive end and playing against a man like Mahan. It is second or third down and the ball is in your hands. The Harvard team is up near the 10 yard line. Mahan is in the backfield. He is a man who can kick, run and throw. He is a man who can do all three things in a manner quite bewildering.

Get the idea quick. In the hypothetical circumstances stated, Mahan may receive the ball. He may get off a punt and then suddenly wheel around and make a wide run through a broken field. For the instant he acts as if he were about to kick, the defensive end will act accordingly. And unfortunately for the end, his appointed tasks for a punt and a wide run are very different from each other.

Thus, if Mahan intends to do one thing, drives in the defense as he to prevent him, and then finds them all by doing another thing suddenly, he has the advantage of a disorganized array of opponents trying to thwart him. From the kicking position, which is about 10 yards back, a man can make a bluff at punting and make a wide end run or throw the forward pass. Or he can start off to make a wide run and then quickly wheel and throw a pass diagonally over the heads of the

But think of what an advantage it was to a defensive player to know that kicking was out of the question when he got the ball. It gave him a great deal less to worry about.

Ferry Houghton once took advantage of the threat and completed it with psychology very successfully against Yale. It was in the fall of 1914, when Captain Houghton, of Harvard, had been out of the game most of the season with an operation for appendicitis. The Yale-Harvard game of that year was to be his last, and he hadn't played in the previous six weeks. But he was there on the bench, and he was to play in the game.

Harvard had scored a couple of touchdowns and had Yale well in hand when it got the ball on Yale's five-yard line on fourth down. It seemed a sure thing to drive the ball over for five yards on the last down and it looked as if Ned Mahan would go in for a drop kick. Then out on the field rushed Houghton and announced himself to the referee. He dropped back some 12 or 13 yards, presented the ball for a dropkick and play was resumed. Everyone in the stands murmured that Houghton was about to make his valiant throw in football with a field goal against Yale, and it looked like the most natural thing in the world. The Yale players thought the same thing, of course, for they figured that Houghton would never have been run in the game for any other purpose.

Well, it was just a case of Houghton out-thinking everyone else. For when the ball was snapped back, instead of going to the waiting hands of Charley Rieckert, it went to Ned Mahan, who simply drove through the unprepared Yale line for five yards and another touchdown. By the Houghton threat, with a little psychology tossed in, Houghton got six points when it seemed that three would have been his limit. It was one of the most surprising ever worked on any team.

DUCK SEASON BRINGS OUT HUNTSMEN

Visiting wild duck were given a warm reception Sunday when every lake and marsh for many miles around were stalked by El Paso sportsmen taking advantage of the opening of the season. Some excellent bags were made despite the number of hunters out and many killed the limit before returning to the city. The marshes along the Rio Grande north of the city were particularly popular and in the vicinity of the Borderland Inn the country road was lined with automobiles left there by ambitious huntsmen in their chase of game.

Many visits were paid below the city, however, especially near the island, where some good bags were made. The season actually opened Saturday morning, but it was not until Sunday when the gunners were out in force. Early Sunday morning the country road in both directions was alive with cars bound for feeding places.

Spanish Champ After Dempsey Would Take Crack At Jack

CHAMPION JACK DEMPSEY is having a hard time finding real opponents to box against. He has a little confidence in when pitted against a man of Jack's caliber. The easy manner in which the champion disposed of Billy Mike and also Jess Willard, from whom he won the championship, is expected to convince the boxing public that it will take a mighty good man to beat him.

There's a New One. Lately there have been reports that Senor Grapael, Cuban sportsman, has been after John Sanchez, champion heavyweight of the South American countries, and Jack Dempsey, for the world's title. An offer of $100,000 was made to the champion and it seemed almost to have him lose the chance to grab off the easy money.

Harry Schuster, who recently returned from Panama, says he has seen Sanchez box several times and that he would be sure to go down to defeat. "The Spaniard is a big fellow," said Schuster, "weighing, I should judge, about 220 pounds, but he does not know the game well enough to beat a man like Dempsey. He is strong, fast and hits well, but the odds would be 5 to 1 on the champion."

Charles Mitchell weighed only about 150 when he fought John L. Sullivan who was over 200 pounds; Bob Fitzsimmons was only 150 when he fought Jim Corbett and little more when he boxed Jim Jeffries, 210 pounds.

Many cases could be recalled, but at the same time there are few boxing fans who will admit that Grapael has a chance with Dempsey, the latter being too big and a terrific hitter. Jimmy Massey, manager of Grapael, points out that his protégé has beaten men whom Dempsey has fought and whom he is now negotiating to battle with, for instance, Billy Mike, Gusman Smith, Willie Mockman, Tommy Gilbride, Bill Brennan and others.

"All these men are bigger than Grapael," said Mr. Massey, "but Harry had trouble beating them. I am not claiming that Grapael can whip Dempsey, but I do say he has a good chance of outlasting him in a limited round match. He has boxed Jack Dempsey and felt the sting of his blows, but despite all this both Harry and myself are confident that Dempsey would be outpunched in a bout of 10 rounds. We have a right to our opinion and are willing to take the chance."

ILLINOIS IS STRONGEST OF CONFERENCE

Chicago, Ill., Oct. 15.—Football results in the western conference yesterday left four teams undefeated thus far this season and practically assured elimination of Minnesota and Purdue from the race for the big ten championship.

Wisconsin and Ohio State won conference games, giving each team a standing of one victory and one loss, while Chicago, which played Wabash, an outside eleven, already had a mark of one victory and no defeat.

The standing of the teams Sunday follows:

Team	W.	L.
Wisconsin	1	0
Ohio State	1	0
Chicago	1	0
Northwestern	1	0
Indiana	1	0
Minnesota	0	1
Purdue	0	1
Michigan	0	1

Standing far above the work of the other teams in Saturday's games was the powerful showing of Illinois, last year's title winner, and Wisconsin.

The Illinois, in a 20 to 0 victory over Iowa, which the previous week had defeated Indiana, showed a driving attack supported by a defense which was impregnable to the Hawkeyes and proved that they will be strong contenders for the conference championship.
